C4 diagram

C1:

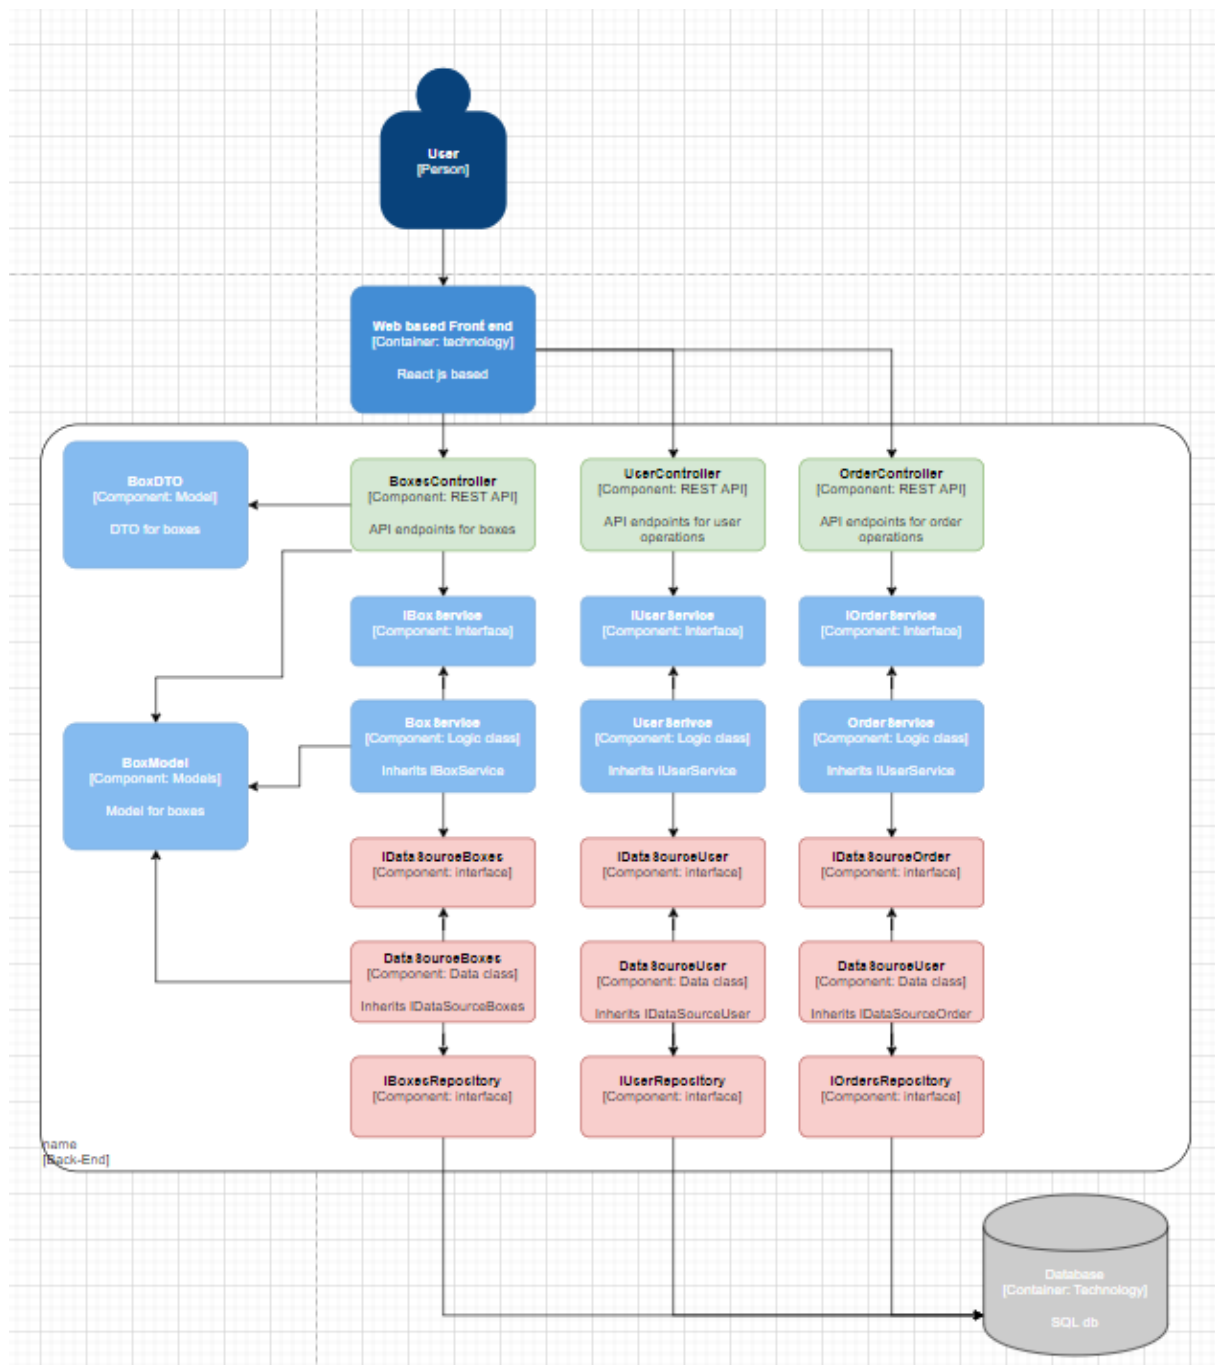

The C1 architecture is quite simple. At this point in time there is only 1 system being created and used. This is the smoke it software system. This system includes the interface for the user, as well as the logic and the database. These can be seen in C2. As 'actors' there are customers and admin.

C2: Zooming in on the Smoke-It software system

The software system mentioned in C1 can be split up into 2 key components. These components will be a React Js based front end and a REST API based back end. The user will be able to interact with the front end, which will contact the back end via the API endpoints. This backend will communicate with the database.

C3: Zooming in on the back end

In this C3 diagram we zoom in on the back end application. The user still interacts with the back end via the React based front end. The structure in the back end should be quite clear. The multiple controllers form the API, which the front end can reach via the created endpoints. These controllers in their turn use a service class. This class handles the logic of the system. In the first version, the service layer talks to a fake DB class, containing some fake data. In the current version, the service layers talks to a database class that is connected to a JPARepository interface. To prevent dependency on the service or DB class, interfaces have been created. They are inserted in between the layers to invert the dependency. Doing this made it easier to, for example, switch out our fake data source for a real one. Not all models have been added in the diagram since they all function the same as the BoxDTO and BoxModel.
